PHILADELPHIA, Pa. – The Pennsylvania Small Business Development Centers (SBDC) have joined with the Pennsylvania Credit Union Association (PCUA) to offer two seminars in October for aspiring and established Boomer business owners in the Pittsburgh and Bethlehem regions.

A growing number of people age 50-plus are turning interests, hobbies or skills into a small business. Whether aspiring business owners are interested in starting a small business right away or are intending to wait until after retirement, now is the time to explore the possibilities.

“Boomers represent one of the fastest growing groups of business owners, and the SBDC stands ready to help them realize their entrepreneurial goals,” said Pennsylvania SBDC State Director Christian Conroy. “We are especially pleased to have the financial expertise of the PCUA as part of these newly launched seminars,” he added.

“Pennsylvania’s Credit Unions are in business to improve their members’ financial lives,” said Patrick Conway, PCUA President & CEO. “As more credit union members become entrepreneurial, their credit union is there to provide the financing to support their small businesses.”

According to data from the Kauffman Foundation’s 2015 State of Entrepreneurship, Boomers are twice as likely to be planning to start a business within a year as Millennials. Data also shows that the share of new entrepreneurs aged 55-64 represents 23 percent of all business owners, which is up 9 percent from 1996.

Aspiring Boomer business owners should register to attend these informative programs to learn about business start-up and financial basics such as the taxes and licenses needed to start their business and legal entity options for their new venture. Experienced financial and legal professionals will be present to discuss financial planning related to starting a small business, loan types and how to work with their local banker, as well as U.S. Small Business Administration resources to assist new entrepreneurs.
